

NEWS

Hot Openings: New hotel celebrates historic Charleston

 Facebook  Tweet  LinkedIn  Email  ShareThis

 Comment  email editors  Print

By Brittany Farb on 8/10/2015

Now open in the heart of Charleston, South Carolina's French Quarter and Market Street Districts, The Spectator Hotel draws inspiration from the 1920s while providing the luxuries of a modern property.

The hotel was named after the iconic spectator shoe and the design team at LS3P Associates and interior designer Jenny Keenan paid homage to the inspiration with curvaceous styling of the wrought iron railings that are reminiscent of the shoe's stitching. The hotel also has an overall eclectic art-deco style.

"Guests at The Spectator Hotel are surrounded by beauty and carefully crafted fashion, form and elegance," said Keenan. "Vintage touches and high-styled Hollywood glamour are complemented by modern sensibilities."

[editorial]

The Spectator Hotel is located in the heart of Charleston's French Quarter and Market Street Districts.

[editorial]

The Spectator Hotel's lobby

The 41 guestrooms boast unique millwork and specialty-crafted furniture from Indonesia, insuring both comfort and sophistication. Rooms are also outfitted with Nespresso Coffee & Espresso machines and C.O. Bigelow.

[editorial]

A deluxe king guestroom

[editorial]

A guestroom bathroom

Guests can enjoy a variety locally sourced, in-room food and beverage options. Gourmet snacks, cocktails, wine and beer are also available at the hotel's bar and social gathering area, inspired by the "Roaring 20's" era.

[editorial]

The hotel's bar was inspired by the "Roaring 20's" era.

[editorial]